He thinks Fuh-chau compares very favorably, as a place of residence for foreigners, with any other Chinese port, regards the beautiful scenery around the place as not a little conducive to good health, by its tendency to promote cheerfulness, and remarks: In conclusion I may say, that having repeatedly visited all the Indian and many other ports this side of Suez, I would prefer the climate of Fuh-chau to that of any port I have been in, excepting Singapore and Penang. School--Preaching. In relation to my labors, I have but little to say. The English school has engrossed my time and strength. I have felt, more and more, that there are increasing difficulties in the way of conducting a large school upon that thorough missionary basis on which it ought to stand. The means and appliances recently set in motion by the government, for the purpose of giving an English as well as vernacular education to all classes of Hindoos throughout the Presidency, is affecting mission institutions more seriously than at first it was thought they would. One effect to be observed is, that we have a much larger number of small boys than formerly. They can come to us and get well grounded in the elementary part of an English education, and then, with this preparation, can step into the government school, and in the course of one, two, or three years, be pretty well qualified to fill some government situation. I have lost,...
