If one is not fettered by (the demands of) women, which always produce the cares and troubles of life, who is the person that will serve others, and bear the disgrace (of servitude)<sup>19</sup> 5. The character of woman is like that of the archers dart, which, the nearer he pulls it (with a view to increase its velocity), the more it (forces) starts in a contrary direction, and the farther it goes after leaving the cord. 6. Like a glazed wall (which reflects the shadows of all objects alike), she forms an attachment even with strangers. Though greatly secured, yet she should, at all times, and at all places, be distrusted as a double-edged sword. <sup>20</sup> 7. When restrained from within, and stopped from without, she becomes, like ones breath, his own destruction. Who (then, ) is the wise man that will put his confidence in woman<sup>21</sup> 8. The mind (of man) is ever inclined to sin. (The For the difference between the Viic (householder) and clem (bhikkhu) see Contributions to Or. Lit. , vol. i. p. 144. f Hattigassa-- although secured in the fist-- had got into your grasp, and therefore, in your power. gates of) hell are wide open, and all around (us) there are sinful associations; and how (therefore) can we be altogether free from fear<sup>22</sup> 9. (Prince, there is yet) another (matter on which I shall offer a few words of advice....
