Excerpt: .c.f a Chung yit che, t in ha (cbt taP pun sya JZLJfy The Due Medium is that which constitutes the great foundation of all the human relations of this world. Ya-ti is sometimes preceded by shP to be. The latter word is then the Copula, but follows, instead ol preceding, the Predicate, as: KiP, chl tvan syau 5hang (chi che SM5 swong shP sya C/tT Amongst those of the ancients who acted in this way, was!M6 wong. If we substitute che for sbi it would convert Wong into a Verb and consequently destroy the sense of the passage. Whenever the sentence terminates in a Verb, or when the cadence has been achieved by other words, yk may be omitted. Hence we may safely say, that ly is almost always used, where the Copula is implied, as: --sShing ki yan ya JjJctl t-tfL To...
