These games have a set, conventionalized form that varies little from century to century and country to country. Numerous articles and books have been written upon them. A good type of this class is W. W. Newell's Games and Songs of American Children. Certain games have become very highly specialized to-day. For instance, football, from the original crude form, has been developed into an extremely elaborate and complicated game. There are a number of books, each devoted solely to the exposition of one of these complex games. The Badminton Library is composed of just such volumes. The Reports of the Ethnological Bureau, edited by J. W. Powell, furnish us with a wealth of material regarding the amusements of uncivilized people. Most of these deal...
